The screenshot shows a Reddit thread with three comments. The top comment is by user 'laffer1' (23h ago), which reads: 'The solution is parenting not technology'. Below it is a comment by user 'Intelligent-Dot-8969' (23h ago), asking: 'Can I ask why you need smart lights in a bathroom?'. The third comment is by user 'satmandu' (17h ago), responding: 'That's a fascinating problem. Maybe you could rig up a separate button in the bathroom to disable smart connectivity for the switch for x number of minutes?'. Each comment has upvote, reply, award, share, and more options buttons.

That's a fascinating problem. Maybe you could rig up a separate button in the bathroom to disable smart connectivity for the switch for x number of minutes?

Anthropomorphising robot vacuums

Do you trust your robot vacuum to run while you're not home?

Home Assistant

I'm planning to buy a robot vacuum this Black Friday and keep thinking about this question. Is it safe to leave the robot vacuum cleaning while I'm out? I want a clean home when I'm back from work. But will it knock something over, bump into my cat, or get stuck under the sofa?

We named ours "drunk uncle" because it's always tripping over things and getting stuck in rooms.
It's funny you get a message on your phone since you're drunk uncle need your assistance.

Let's forget about the locks for a second...

Why are there two peepholes and knockers that are on the inside of the door? Or are these locks on the outside?

you guys are just being gatekeeping snooty bitches you can totally automate this with 5 august locks with 3d printed adapters and 2 stepper motors with relays, with fishing line going to each of the 27 slide locks with 2 pulleys (one for each side of the door for the left or right justified locks).
